He seems to be infinitely more concerned in vilifying individuals than he does in logically advancing the cause of temperance. Does he imagine for one moment that if the people in question were placed in durance vile that the sale of intoxicants in Jewett City would cause? City would cease?
I hold no brief for liquor sellers, be they town wardens or town barbers, but I fail to see that the jailing of a town warden and the imprisonment of a town barber must necessarily cause the town drunkard to seek refreshment at the town pump.

Now, Citizen's allusion to the priesthood seems to me altogether beside the point, and is certainly an evidence of bad taste.

If you sentence all the illegal liquor
'sellers in Jewett City (and there are more, Mr. Citizen), the sale would still at the town pump.

You cannot make a man temperate by an act of congress. When there is a demand, there will also follow a supply. "Beautiful words butter no parsnips." Four years of Jewett City under no-license, and the beautiful platitudes and pleasing promises of the temperance party have resulted in I venture to assert that, instead of advancing the cause of temperance, the present system, as exemplified in Jewett City, has been productive

One effect has been to cause people to go elsewhere for drink, undoubted-y. But I fail to see any more temperance in a man drinking in Norwich than there is in his drinking in Jewett Can Citizen inform me as to the percentage of temperance converts one in jail. Well, let me, in conclus-ion, suggest (along the same lines), a "safe cure." If Citizen would enforce the law by means of jailing, let him jail drinkers and sellers, and, I had almost added, temperance cranks, too.
